

Denise Fisher

Denise Fisher currently writes on France in the South Pacific, with a particular focus on contemporary New Caledonia. She is a Visiting Fellow with the Australian National University Centre for European Studies.

A former senior Australian diplomat, Denise has served as Australia's High Commissioner in Zimbabwe, concurrently accredited to Angola, Malawi, Zambia and Mozambique; and as Australia's Consul-General in New Caledonia covering the French Pacific territories. She has served as political and economic analyst in a number of post-colonial countries (Burma, Kenya, India, Malaysia) and as Counsellor (Political) in the Australian Embassy, Washington.

Since leaving the Department of Foreign Affairs, she has written France in the South Pacific: power and politics (2013). Denise has a Masters in International Public Diplomacy from Johns Hopkins University (1993), and a Masters of Philosophy at the Australian National University (2012). In 2011 she was made Chevalier in the French National Order of Merit.
