(b) Development of significant innovations and/or publications in curriculum development, student assessment, teaching procedures and teaching materials

University of Otago

2014 Revised the content for POLS 320, emphasizing the geopolitical dimension of Pacific politics. I have maintained the comparative element of the course, comparing individual Pacific island country politics, but have also included an examination and analysis of geopolitical factors. The course title has been changed to “Pacific Geopolitics in the 21st Century” to reflect these.

2013 Revised the content for POLS 419, incorporating ways to have students be more engaged with the course content. By and large, these appear to have been successful, please see attached teacher and course evaluations.

2011 Developed two new papers: POLS 320 (Pacific Geopolitics in the 21st Century) and POLS 419 (Conflicts, Crises, and New Zealand Foreign Policy in the Pacific)

University of Canterbury

2009-2010 Part of committee that revised the course syllabus for PACS 101, and developed an entirely new syllabus for PACS 201. I made significant modifications to the syllabi for PolS 214 and 308.
